The Rickards are a family of commercial fishermen who have made their living in the dangerous waters of Alaska for generations. Despite the risks, they continue to return to the sea in search of a better life.

The family patriarch, Bill Rickard, Sr., started fishing in the Bering Sea in the 1950s. He was a pioneer in the industry, and he quickly became one of the most successful fishermen in Alaska. Bill's sons, Bill Jr. and Jeff, followed in their father's footsteps and became commercial fishermen themselves.

The Rickards are a close-knit family, and they rely on each other for support. They work together to operate their fishing boat, the F/V Arctic Rose. The Arctic Rose is a 120-foot crab boat, and it is one of the most technologically advanced fishing boats in Alaska.

The Rickards fish for a variety of seafood, including crab, salmon, and halibut. They work long hours in dangerous conditions, but they are proud of their work. They are providing for their families, and they are contributing to the Alaskan economy.

The Rickards have faced many challenges over the years. They have lost boats to storms, and they have seen friends and family members die at sea. But they have never given up. They are determined to make a living in the Alaskan waters, and they are willing to face whatever challenges come their way.

The Rickards are a true Alaskan family. They are tough, resilient, and resourceful. They are also a family that is united by the perils of the Alaskan waters.
